About the webinar

This free webinar on 15 December 2020 at 1.30 pm GMT is aimed at managers and others who are responsible for making significant decisions about investment in learning and development.

The Covid-19 pandemic has put additional pressures on organisations world-wide. When times get tough we know that budgets and resources are affected and funding for training and development are often among the first casualties. Right now, we need to turn the crisis into an opportunity and look creatively at ways of increasing the capacity and the resilience of our staff.

We know from listening to our clients that the need for staff development is still pressing. As well as affordability, they now have the additional pressure of not being able to supply training from traditional sources which, in former times, meant travelling to training venues and/or working in groups.

Some things haven't changed – the systematic identification of who needs training in what and how to evaluate the value from training interventions remain key issues.

In turning a crisis into an opportunity, this webinar will enable you to think again about how to plan, deliver and evaluate training interventions. It will explore using the workplace as a learning laboratory and how management and staff roles might change for the better in upskilling our workforce.

The webinar will be led by Sheena Matthews, whose career has been dedicated to working with decision makers globally to get the best from investment in learning and development. The session will be interactive and participants will be encouraged to share experience and ideas via the online platform.
